OPEC glut, U.S. gas diet to stabilize fuel prices

NEW YORK (AP) — Summer's glut of motorists usually means increases at the gasoline pump. But ample gas supplies and Arabians' refusal to cut oil output should mean stable prices, and perhaps some price cuts this year, analysts say.

Exporting Countries agreed this week in Geneva to freeze prices, and most of the OPEC members agreed to cut production by at least 10 percent because of high supplies of oil. However, Saudi Arabia refused to go along with the cuts and OPEC oil ministers said the cuts would not be enough to end the glut.

Traditionally, increased demand for gasoline in the summer pushed up prices a penny or two a gallon. But that pattern was broken last year, and the oil industry is watching to see whether drivers will again take shorter trips or choose to leave their cars home.

"This summer may be a severe disappointment" for oil companies, said Dan Lundberg, who publishes a newsletter on the gasoline market. He predicts a smaller increase in summer gasoline sales than was considered normal before last year.

The weakness of gasoline prices, Lundberg said, was shown in the fact that average wholesale prices dropped half a cent in the two weeks before Memorial Day, when prices normally rise.

"This is absolutely unprecedented," he said.

The situation varies by region. The tightest supplies are on the West Coast, partly because of a fire that cut production at a Standard Oil Co. of California refinery. Social raised prices by a penny a gallon in the West on Wednesday, five days after it cut prices by two cents a gallon along the East Coast.

While the gasoline market is weak, prices are still a lot higher than last year, thanks to previous OPEC increases and to President Reagan's decision to lift domestic price controls ahead of schedule.

The average national retail price of gasoline this morning is $1.36 a gallon, up 10 percent from just more than $1.23 last year, Lundberg said.

Conservation is a major cause of the weakness in oil markets. Americans used 6 percent less gasoline in 1980 than in 1979. Through April, gasoline use was down 1 percent from the 1980 rate. The 1980 figure was 11 percent below the 1978 peak.

"Conservation measures are taking effect, particularly in the United States," Indonesian Oil Minister Subroto, OPEC's president, said Wednesday.

Jet crashes into Nimitz; 4 killed, 45 wounded

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — A military jet crashed on a night mission, crashed in flames, and crashed into the aircraft carrier USS Nimitz, killing 14 people, injuring 45 and damaging at least one other aircraft aboard the largest warship, Navy officials said Wednesday.

A Navy helicopter pilot who flew from the EA-6B Frowler jet, which reported seeing "just a big aircraft." The accident occurred shortly before the Jacksonville 60 miles off the Jacksonville coast.

The crash included all three crew members. The EA-6B Frowler jet, which was used to jam enemy radar and signals, The Marine Corps is of the type that was nearly grounded last year because of a history of fatal accidents.

Lt. Laurence D. Cragan, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Cragan of 1333 W. 1st St., Orem, was among those killed in the accident. Cragan, 30, a naval flight officer, was a graduate of both Orem High School and Brigham Young University. He is survived by one daughter.

Initial reports from the Navy spokesman who asked to be identified said the jet apparently landed a little right of the line, and on a carrier deck that had no room for an error like Navy said the cause of the crash was under investigation and might not be released for several days. Vice Adm. George Kinnebrew, commander-in-chief of the 7th Fleet Atlantic, flew to the ship from Norfolk, Va., to the home base.

The jet "crashed on impact" at 11:51 p.m., sparking a blaze that spread quickly to other aircraft on deck before ship firefighters extinguished it, said Cmdr. Jim Lora, a spokesman for Naval Air Forces Atlantic. "As far as I know, weather was not a factor," he said.

A list of the dead and injured was being withheld until all relatives were notified, the Navy said.

A team of doctors was airlifted from the Naval Station here to the Nimitz to help treat 24 injured people in the ship's sick bay. Twenty people were flown to the Naval Regional Medical Center at Jacksonville for treatment and one man was hospitalized at St. Vincent's Hospital in critical condition.

Nick Young, public affairs officer at the Jacksonville Naval Air Station, said none of the other injured was in critical condition.

The accident did not affect the carrier's nuclear propulsion system or its navigational ability, Young said. The Nimitz, accompanied by the destroyer USS Moosburger, began steaming back to Norfolk, Va., was expected to arrive sometime Thursday.

Navy officials said they were unsure how seriously the carrier was damaged, but Lt. Cmdr. Ken Pease, spokesman at the Navy's Norfolk, Va., air station, said 20 aircraft were destroyed or damaged. Destroyed were the EA-6B and three F-14 aircraft. There was major damage to four A-7 aircraft and one F-14, and minor damage to one F-14, five A-7s, one A-6, three S-3 helicopters and one H-3 helicopter.

Rear Admiral Byron Fuller, commander of Carrier Group 4, was aboard the Nimitz coordinating training exercises, the Navy said. The ship's skipper is Capt. John R. Batzler.

Missionary tax ruling

Deduction denied

By RODD G. WAGNER
Universe Staff Writer

A U.S. District Court ruling has determined that contributions made to a Mormon missionary are not deductible from federal income tax.

The issue was raised concerning money paid by Mr. and Mrs. Don K. White of Salt Lake City for their son Lyle's support and travel expenses while he was serving a mission for the LDS Church.

Mr. and Mrs. White brought suit against the Internal Revenue Service, claiming the money used for their son's support and travel was a contribution to the LDS Church, and was therefore tax exempt.

"This is the first case where a court denied a deduction when the donor paid money to the well-established program of a charity, where the charity picked the agent (the missionary) and the money was given in the amount the charity requested," said Robert Lunt, attorney for the Whites.

"The key issue was whether the contribution was made to the tax-exempt organization, or to the individual," said Bill O'Connell, an affairs officer for the IRS in Salt Lake.

Judge Bruce S. Jenkins ruled the funds were given to the missionary, and "were not to or for the use of (the LDS Church), and are not deductible."

Questioning the ruling, Lunt asked, "Why can a person deduct money given to a bishop, who is a part-time minister, and not deduct money given to a missionary, who is a full-time minister?"

"The money was not going for my personal use," said Lyle White, the missionary. White said because he was a representative of the Mormon Church, and because he used the money in that capacity, he feels it should be deductible.

A letter sent to mission and stake presidents from the First Presidency of the LDS Church in 1978 has resulted in a number of such deduction claims.

The letter stated funds given to missionaries were to be considered a contribution to the church, and emphasized the responsibility of missionaries to spend their funds wisely.

A member of the LDS Church missionary department said the letter was never intended to be used for tax purposes.

Hinckley not harmed by willful Tylenol O.D.

BUTNER, N.C. (AP) — John W. Hinckley Jr., the man accused of trying to assassinate President Reagan, took an overdose of Tylenol in an apparent "attempt to harm himself" Wednesday, but was treated at a prison infirmary and has recovered, a federal official said.

Tom DeCair, a spokesman for the U.S. Justice Department in Washington, said Hinckley, 26, took an undetermined amount of the aspirin substitute, which he had requested and had been saving up in his quarters at the Butner Correctional Facility.

Hinckley had "been depressed lately and apparently tried to harm himself," DeCair said.

He said Hinckley was given an antidote and was later returned to his quarters after tests were run to check the degree of toxicity in his system. He said Hinckley was being placed under a 24-hour watch.

"He is not in a life-threatening situation," DeCair said.

DeCair said that at 2:30 p.m. Wednesday afternoon Hinckley told a defense psychiatrist that he had taken the Tylenol. According to DeCair, the psychiatrist immediately informed medical personnel at Butner, who administered the antidote.

Hinckley was arrested outside the Hilton Hotel in Washington, March 30, moments after Reagan, press secretary James Brady, a policeman and a Secret Service agent were shot.

He was taken to Butner after a court in Washington ordered psychiatric tests to determine his competence to stand trial.

In Washington Hinckley's principal attorney, Vincent Fuller, declined to accept a call from a reporter about the episode.

DeCair said Hinckley had been under 24-hour watch for a short time after his arrival at Butner, but that the watch had been discontinued until Wednesday.

NOW opposes Lee nomination

The 140,000-member National Organization of Women (NOW) opposed President Ronald Reagan's nomination of BYU law school dean Rex E. Lee to the position of United States solicitor general Wednesday.

According to Becky Fenstermaker, Utah NOW action coordinator, the NOW national headquarters in Washington, D.C., said Lee wasn't actually nominated yet, but that the announcement was a "trial balloon" sent up by Reagan to see who would oppose the nomination.

"With Lee in the position of solicitor general, we are sure that women won't have a fair shake as far as discrimination cases go," Ms. Fenstermaker said.

Lee, currently the dean of the J. Reuben Clark Law School, was appointed by Reagan Saturday. Final confirmation of the nomination will be voted on by the Senate in early June.

"Our main objection to Lee's appointment simply is that he is opposed to the Equal Rights Amendment, as is evidenced by his book 'A Lawyer Looks at the Equal Rights Amendment,'" Ms. Fenstermaker said.

"The fact that he has written the book shows his bias to the ERA," Ms. Fenstermaker said. "The problem with the book is that it is erroneous. Some of what he says sounds like it might make sense to those who don't understand the issues."

"We don't want this attitude to carry over into such an influential position such as solicitor general," she added.

NOW national headquarters will release an official statement on Lee's appointment today.

Ainge faces strike, NBA

By KIP HEINER Universe Staff Writer

Ex-BYU star athlete Danny Ainge may have to meet the midnight hour in more than one way tonight.

Ainge is a major league baseball player with the American League's Toronto Blue Jays and a players' strike is scheduled to begin Thursday at midnight.

Besides that problem, Ainge is also faced with rumors some National Basketball Association teams might want to buy up his baseball contract and draft him in the June 9 NBA draft.

Ainge said there is a general attitude among the Toronto players to strike over the controversial issue of compensation — whether a team that loses a big name player to free agency should be compensated with a talented player from the other team — and whether compensation will restrict player movement.

"We don't want to strike, nobody wants to strike, but we're prepared to, and we'll stay on strike as long as it takes to win," Ainge said. "We're not going to give in."

According to Ainge, the owners, not the players, want a strike. "Baseball is bigger than it has ever been, and the owners want more money," Ainge said. "The players want to keep things the way they are, but the owners want to change. The owners must want the strike. They aren't doing anything to negotiate."

Ainge isn't off to a good start this year, hitting only .164. Toronto officials say that's because Ainge is a young player under a lot of pressure.

Howard Starkman, director of public relations for the Toronto Blue Jays, said "We didn't expect a 300 hitter, but we did expect a little better than he is giving. We feel he isn't doing as good as expected because of pressure from fans and team members."

Ainge said he feels the pressure. "I'm trying too hard to prove to everybody that I made the right choice. The press has said, 'Danny, won't you admit you made a wrong decision?' I'm not ready to do that yet," Ainge said.

Ainge said NBA teams have told him they want to buy his baseball contract but Toronto officials say they aren't going to let that happen. "He has a contract with us and he'll have to honor it. We haven't heard anything about him being drafted by the NBA," said one team official.

Garn explains views on MX deployment in letter to Reagan

By LISA BARLOW
Universe Staff Writer

Sen. Jake Garn, R-Utah, pursued his personal convictions for deploying the MX in existing Minuteman silos by presenting President Ronald Reagan with a letter explaining his views Tuesday.

The statement presented to Reagan by Garn shows a great inflexibility in coming to grips with the problem of MX, said Gen. William Fairbourn, retired strategy planner for the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The letter was co-signed by 22 other members of Congress, and asked for deployment of the MX missiles in existing Minuteman III silos with defense provided by an anti-ballistic missile system.

The Minuteman III system is considered vulnerable to destruction in a Soviet attack because of the missile's confinement in underground silos. Proposed protection for the MX missiles will come from the anti-ballistic missile system, Fairbourn said.

To accomplish this, the 1972 ABM treaty with the Soviet Union, limiting the use of the anti-ballistic missiles will have to be amended.

Garn's letter to Reagan questions the Soviet Union's violations of the 1972 treaty, in which the USSR apparently made illegal efforts to expand its own ABM system.

In the original treaty the United States and the Soviet Union were each allowed two ABM systems, one for protection of a city and the other for protection of a missile system. The treaty was given one year for protocol, after which each country was allowed one ABM system.

The U.S. kept the ABM system in North Dakota. This system was later put out of use because of the lack of confidence in the operation of the system.

"There are basically two things wrong with using silos," Fairbourn said.

"The minute you put them in silos to replace them with the ABM, you put them in as much danger as the Minuteman III is now," he said. "So what do you prove when you protect them with the ABM when it doesn't even exist? We don't have it."

Because of the abandonment of the ABM system in North Dakota, there is no existing ABM system in the United States, according to the MX Information Center. Implementation of a new ABM system will come no earlier than 1986, after the MX will be deployed in the silos.

Another problem expressed by Fairbourn is putting the MX in a fixed position gives up the strategic initiative.

"Someone who knows how to build sophisticated weapons doesn't care about strategic initiative," Fairbourn said. "But someone who has studied strategy for 40 years knows that if you willingly give up the strategic initiative you've lost the war."

Fairbourn said the strategic initiative gives the person who holds it the capability to choose where and when he attacks.

Baseball star Danny Ainge faces the possibility of a baseball players' strike and rumors of his baseball contract and drafting him in the June 9 NBA draft.

New rioting causes millions in damages

JACKSON, Mich. (AP) — Inmates of two Michigan prisons were locked in their cells Wednesday after the second series of riots in less than a week injured 84 people and caused millions of dollars in damage.

Southern Michigan Prison in Jackson, the world's largest locked prison, was "totally locked down" after Tuesday's 12-hour outbreak of arson and pillaging, authorities said.

Corrections officials blamed the trouble at Jackson, scene of a riot last Friday which officials called the worst in three decades, on a melee Tuesday night at Marquette State Prison, 425 miles to the north.

Damages probably "will run into millions of dollars" at Jackson, said Edward Benson, prison business manager. Preliminary assessments place damage at as much as $3 million at Marquette, "just to the buildings alone," said Warden Ted Koehler.

Armed with pipes, rake handles and baseball bats, up to 1,000 Jackson inmates torched six modular units housing 280 inmates and set fire to three damaged two cell blocks, a school and a kitchen.

Guards said they received advance warning of the trouble, but Jackson Warden Barry Mintzes said, "We had no word that there may be problems."

Reporters showed James Pogats, administrative assistant to the warden, copies of leaflets which guards said were circulated by inmates announcing a riot would take place at 12:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Pogats said it was the first time he had seen the rambling, two-paragraph announcement.

Gerald Fry of the guards' union, the Michigan Corrections Organization, criticized prison guards for not putting more guards on duty after being warned of the plans Monday night.

Pogats said virtually all 5,600 inmates at the prison were confined to their cells or living quarters.

In Marquette, 200 of the 820 inmates refused to return to their cells after an exercise period and went on a four-hour rampage.

"I have no doubt that the underlying cause was sympathy to the downstate prisoners (at Jackson)," said Jack Bergman, superintendent of a prison annex at Marquette.

Lefever under fire

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ernest W. Lefever, the Reagan administration's prospective point man on human rights, faced new questions Wednesday after it was learned the Nestle Corp. bankrolled a mailing list which he used to distribute an article favoring the sale of infant formula to poor nations.

Richard Edelman, an executive of Nestle's public relations firm, said Nestle, a leading infant formula producer, paid for the list. Lefever's private policy center used it to mail out an attack on critics of formula sales in the Third World, Edelman said.

Lefever refused comment on Edelman's disclosure. But last week — in sworn Senate testimony — he said: "It is the policy of the center not to accept contributions for specific projects in which a donor has a direct or indirect financial interest."

Edelman, senior vice president of Daniel J. Edelman Inc. of New York, told The Associated Press Tuesday a mailing list containing names of "opinion leaders" was compiled last July at the request of Nestle, one of his firm's clients.

He said the cost of the list was charged to the giant Swiss-based food manufacturer, but was sent directly to Lefever, president of the Washington-based Ethics and Public Policy Center, for the mailing of the article.

Edelman declined to say how much the list cost or how many names were on it, and he added: "Nestle's supplying of the list is in no way a contribution to the center."

However, Rod Young, an Internal Revenue service spokesman, said such a gift to a non-profit organization would qualify as a tax-deductible donation under federal law.

Nestle and other infant formula manufacturers have been criticized for marketing milk substitutes in poor countries. Opponents say formula is often mixed with contaminated water and contributes to the deaths of millions of children.

Last week, the World Health Organization voted overwhelmingly to discourage the sale of infant formula in poor countries, although the United States opposed the move.

The Foreign Relations Committee is expected to vote next month on Lefever's nomination to be assistant secretary of state for human rights.

Habib called home for consultations

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan called home his special Mideast envoy, Philip Habib, Wednesday for consultations concerning the next U.S. attempt to prevent an outbreak of fighting between Israel and Syria.

Reagan rejected any suggestion that the mission so far has failed. Reagan said Israel and Syria had been "on the verge of war and that has not happened." And he declared that Habib had done "a remarkable job" during his three weeks of shuttle diplomacy in Lebanon, Syria, Israel and Saudi Arabia.

Reagan said the veteran diplomat, who is due here Thursday, would return to the region following talks expected to last several days. But there was mounting evidence that Habib had come up empty-handed in the attempt to use Saudi Arabia as a mediator for pressuring Syria to withdraw Soviet-made missiles from Lebanon, as a senior State Department official made clear, however, that the administration does not expect Israel to use Habib's departure as an excuse to attack the missiles. The official asked to remain anonymous.

Israeli radio said Habib's efforts had been rebuffed. But the official asked to remain anonymous.

LDS Historical Office

Y to get history division

Under the direction of the First Presidency of the LDS Church, BYU will become the new home of the Church History Division of the Church Historical Office in June.

The division will be in Knight Mangum Hall under the supervision of Martin B. Hickman, dean of the College of Family, Home and Social Sciences. The division will be renamed the Joseph Smith Institute for Church History.

It was renamed in honor of former LDS Church President Joseph Fielding Smith to recognize his contributions during the more than 50 years he served as church historian.

According to Leonard J. Arrington, former church historian and present director of the institute, church authorities believe that because of the academic nature of the institute and the resources BYU has to offer, the institute will function better as an affiliate of BYU rather than an affiliate of the Church Historical Office.

The main purposes of the institute will be to prepare books including biographies of important church leaders and monographs of important historical events, and to edit and publish original manuscripts, Arrington said.

"Large quantities of primary source material in church and BYU archives previously have not been examined by scholars," he said. "The institute's primary task is to do this."

The institute was formed last summer under the direction of the LDS First Presidency and the Council of the Twelve, but was not able to be moved to BYU until June because of lack of space on campus.

Orem proposes public-fee hike

The Orem City Council proposed raising public fees and charges and cutting city employee pay increases in a budget session Wednesday.

"The city is just not charging enough for what it does," said Forrest Henderson, Orem city manager assistant.

He said other Utah cities similar to Orem charge more for services.

Councilman Gareth W. Seastrand asked that "employee pay increases be reviewed and compared to other Utah cities."

While Orem city employees have been receiving a 12 percent quarterly pay increase, most Utah cities pay only 7.5 percent raises.

Orem Mayor James E. Mangum said the council was obligated to pay the 12 percent increase.

Mangum said temporary city employees might be the answer to the budget problem.

Gas fumes return

WEST VALLEY CITY, Utah (AP) — Five homes were evacuated late Wednesday and access to dozens of businesses was cut off as gasoline fumes returned to the area where earlier 750 persons evacuated from their homes and businesses Tuesday had been allowed to return.

City Fire Marshal Jay Miles said seven spots had been found where there were concentrations of flammable vapors, and a one-mile stretch of 35th Street was closed off, cutting access to many businesses.

He said none of the businesses had been ordered evacuated yet, but "Harrison's may be."

The five homes evacuated were all in the same area, about 3650 West.

"We're scurrying madly," Miles said.

Earlier Wednesday, about 100 businesses

Becky inches toward normal blood count

After battling a dangerously low white blood count, Becky Barton overcame a milestone in her recovery when she broke the 1,000 count level, said Dorothy Sudweeks, the family spokeswoman.

Wednesday Becky's white cell count was 1,330, more than twice the count of 584 Friday, said Mrs. Sudweeks.

Becky's cell count on Wednesday was the highest since her bone marrow transplant April 22.

Becky, who is suffering from leukemia, has been in isolation since April 16 and cannot leave isolation until her white blood cell count exceeds 5,000.

Mrs. Sudweeks said Becky is in high spirits and has a positive outlook, although there are many instances when, because of the illness and medication, she becomes depressed.

"This weekend was a milestone for Becky and we're all glad to be past it," Mrs. Sudweeks said.

reopened and dozens of people were allowed to return to their homes as gasoline fumes were cleared from basements and the city sewer system.

City Fire Marshal Jay Miles said an old gasoline spill at a long-demolished bulk distribution plant was probably responsible for the problem. He said recent heavy rains could have driven the spilled liquid to the surface and into the sewer system.

The liquid apparently entered the system through a break in one of the sewer mains, Miles said. The main has been repaired and special "sniffer" equipment taken door-to-door Wednesday morning showed potentially explosive fumes had dissipated.

"The readings were minimal or unreadable," he said.

The old bulk distribution plant was located in what is now a parking lot for a large grocery store, he said.

"Our technology is catching up with us," Miles said. "The old tanks are starting to rupture." He said a number of old storage tanks failed along Utah's heavily-populated Wasatch Front last year and the problem is likely to continue. He said new underground storage tanks are less likely to break apart.

Grad's job: outdoor life

To some people, going to work every day is tiresome and boring. But to one BYU graduate whose office is the great outdoors, work is a beautiful experience.

Randal Brudnicki graduated from BYU in April 1978 and moved to Salt Lake City. An outdoorsman, Brudnicki was concerned that the rest of his life would be spent punching a time clock and longing for vacations.

"The thought of sitting behind a desk for the rest of my life was frightening," Brudnicki said. "I wanted to hunt and fish but didn't want to wait 40 years until I retired."

In December 1978, opportunity knocked and Brudnicki was given a chance of a lifetime. "I was offered a job as a salesman for a hunting and fishing organization. I sold club memberships and set up hunting and fishing trips all over the United States, Canada, and Mexico," he said. "It is hard work, but very enjoyable."

"As much as I love my job," said Brudnicki, "it is not without its trying moments. I remember taking a group of top executives from a large oil company fishing at Strawberry Reservoir. They knew everything there was to know about fishing, or so they thought."

After several hours of failure, the men asked for help and Brudnicki had to do everything for them, including baiting their hooks.

"At times I get paid well for doing nothing more than babysitting older men," said Brudnicki. "But this is the exception and not the rule. I guess what I love most about my job is seeing the look on a person's face when he shoots a big buck or catches a trophy-sized fish. I get just as excited as he does," he said.

Y ballroom dancers to try for world title

This week in the international world of dancing, the BYU Ballroom Dance Team will be competing for the world championships in Blackpool, England.

Linda Flemming, administrative assistant, said many ballroom dance championships are held annually worldwide, but Blackpool's week-long competition is the most long-standing and most highly celebrated.

Countries from all over the world will be participating in this event. The German and Japanese teams are considered to be the ones to beat.

BYU sent 38 dancers on tour, but only three teams, the amateur latin, modern ballroom and professional couple will compete.

"The rest of the dancers are alternates in case someone breaks a leg or something," Miss Flemming explained.

This year's new ballroom team director is Lee Wakefield. Wakefield and his wife have been invited to perform in the professional division as a solo couples act.

In the past, BYU's ballroom teams have achieved world-class recognition in both latin and modern categories. They have won world championships in both dance styles and have received second and third places other years.

During a recent 23-day tour, Miss Flemming said the team performed before audiences in Mormon stake centers and civic centers "in hopes to entertain and achieve further world-class recognition," she said.

FOUR SEASONS
(PG: profanity, adult situations)

Just the other day I asked a few friends if they had seen "Four Seasons." Their reaction was one of uncertainty.

"Oh, do you mean the group? I didn't know they were in town."

"No, I mean the movie. A story written and directed by Alan Alda."

ALAN ALDA

The movie deals with three middle-aged couples, affluent friends of Alda and his wife Carol Burnett who spend their vacations together each year.

We get to know them through excursions they take during one year: a countryhouse in spring, a yacht in the Virgin Islands in summer, a fall visit to their daughter's Connecticut college and a skiing trip to Vermont.

Each season of the year is introduced by light measures of classic music, a refreshing approach that prepares the audience for the seasonal changes.

Alda plays a lawyer who keeps making speeches about openness and friendship, but who clams up if asked to comply with his own preaching. He is a firm believer of "getting to the heart of the matter."

On the other hand, his wife wishes he would just once admit when he is angry or wrong.

Len Cariou, an old friend and insurance salesman who refers to himself as an "estate planner and member of the million-dollar round table," is the cause of all the commotion between the couples when he dumps Sandy Dennis after 21 years of marriage and takes up with sweet, young, blonde Bess Armstrong, a newcomer to the screen.

The last couple, dentist Jack Weston and his Italian wife, played by Rita Moreno, add to the color of the events. Weston is always adding up food bills at the table or worrying about the resale value of his Mercedes, while his wife repeatedly excuses her actions declaring, "I'm Italian so what am I suppose to do?"

THE LEGEND OF THE LONE RANGER
(PG: violence)

"Hi-o, Silver" — The Lone Ranger rides again!

If you, like me, used to sit in front of the "tube" and watch the adventures of the Lone Ranger as he brought law and order to the wild frontier, I think you will enjoy this show. I was pleasantly surprised how good it really was.

The movie is an entertaining adventure. It is a story of virtue, friendship and of daring exploits. It is a story of an American hero whose time will never end.

While Klinton Spilsbury comes to the title role with virtually no acting experience, he has strong presence. He gives the role a new youthful, fresh interpretation.

Rape suspect charged

A Minnesota man described by Provo Police officials as a "drift" was charged Tuesday with attempted rape of a Provo woman.

Russell Stanley Quast, 23, was arrested over the weekend according to Provo Detective Glade Terry. "He had a public defender appointed during the night and will stand trial on June 10," said Terry. "The charge is attempted rape, which is a third-degree felony in this state."

Quast is charged with the beating and attempted rape of a Provo woman near the South University Avenue viaduct April 21. According to police officials, the woman left a downtown bar about 11:30 p.m. on April 20. About an hour later, a man who had followed her from the bar, attacked her and beat her severely. The woman was taken to Utah Valley Hospital with severe facial lacerations and cuts. "The woman is definitely following through with the assault charges against Quast," said Terry.

Removal of barriers to aid handicapped

Orem City Council appropriated $5,000 Tuesday for a contract with Handicapped Awareness, Inc., to identify and remove architectural barriers which limit accessibility for disabled citizens. Handicapped Awareness is a Utah non-profit corporation funded by state and federal money.

"The agreement identifies the areas of Orem which will be surveyed and establishes a deadline for completion of the survey and the written report," said Daryl Berlin, Orem City Manager.

"The study includes a checklist of items referring to handicapped parking, doors and exits, stairs and handrails, aisle width and interior and exterior thresholds," said Lana Brown, director and founder of Handicapped Awareness.

Businesses may receive up to $25,000 in tax deductions for removal of barriers, according to an Internal Revenue Service report. A barrier is defined as all or part of a facility, structure, equipment, road, walk, parking lot or similar property.

The Orem study will include 470 businesses, said Miss Brown.

"There are thousands of handicapped people in Utah County. Orem businesses need to be aware of barriers that prevent these people from being able to shop in Orem," she said.

The Council appropriated another $5,000 for any barrier removal that the city will be made aware of after the survey. "Most of that money will go toward handicapped parking signs and other major items," said Brent Garlick, Orem City block grant coordinator.

Heritage Mountain Resort gets OK for preliminary development plan

HARRY WEISS, Assistant News Editor, said the preliminary development plan for Heritage Mountain Resort was approved last night by the City Commission.

The plan, which was approved by the City Commission, allows the resort to be located on 1200 East between Center Street and North Street, and has a total of 100 acres, and has been talked about for nearly eight years.

Michael Lee, one of the partners in the development, said after the meeting, "We'll meet the conditions approved and make a final submittal."

Guy Callahan, a spokesman against some aspects of the development, said the approval will allow drug traffic at the end of 700 North. "My chief objection is that the developers are given the OK to go ahead without adequate planning and proper preparation," he said.

"A satisfactory solution will be reached before final approval," said A. John Clarke, a Provo City commissioner.

Provo Mayor James E. Ferguson said, "It needs to be clear that we are dealing with a preliminary development plan approval and not a final approval."

Greg Beckstrom, Provo City zoning administrator, said the approval will permit the resort to request final development, but no building permits will be issued until final approval.

Another man, who lives on 1080 East, was concerned whether there would be problems with flooding. Beckstrom said there will be temporary retention basins to prevent flooding.

At the beginning of the meeting Beckstrom read the 17 conditions attached to the conditional permit. Some of the conditions were: having sufficient funds to complete the project, proposed recreational vehicle parking, construction and solid waste removal.

The mayor suggested the city reserve the right to review the finances of the developer in addition to the Forest Service.

LOP program aids students

Something unexpected has happened with the Lack of Progress Program (LOP) at Brigham Young University.

It's working.

When a student acquires 35 percent non-progress and/or failing grades in his most recent 30 credit hours of study, he is placed on LOP status.

Non-progress grades are W, I, T and NS. Any class repeated within the 30 credit-hour period is considered a non-progress grade. Failing grades of E, UW, WE and IE are also included.

This means if 10.5 or more of a student's previous 30 class hours are non-progress or failing grades, he is listed with LOP.

When a student falls into the category described above, a letter is sent to the student, and if his LOP percentage does not drop below 35 by his next semester enrollment, he is put on LOP warning. A subsequent semester of LOP results in LOP probation, which can result in suspension from the university after one more semester on LOP.

One year ago, the first 1,600 students who received their LOP notification were less than happy.

For the first time, BYU was using a measure of good academic standing apart from the traditional grade point average.

It appeared Academic Standards was on a crusade to sift the chaff from the wheat; to decide who to kick out of school in order to make room for others.

"At first, students complained about the program, so we never expected positive response," said Hap Hansen, a counselor in Academic Standards. "But in the past year, they realized we're not just out to get them, that we really want to help."

Instead of having to wait to counsel a student on the brink of academic probation or suspension, Academic Standards can see early indication of potential problems by LOP status and offer the student help.

The majority of LOP students return to good academic standing. Most are grateful for the program.

Some have said the motivation of getting off LOP made them realize for the first time that school should be taken seriously.

Not surprisingly, it seems those who are eventually suspended from school because of LOP never went for counseling during the four continuous semesters allowed on LOP before suspension.

One controversial factor in LOP has been the inclusion of W grades. A W is given when a class is dropped after the last day to add classes. This indicates that a student is lowering his enrollment without being able to add more hours.

Academic Standards will work with any student having problems and special situations. But they realize a student can't be forced to seek help.

After LOP suspension, the process of returning to BYU is not the same as with GPA suspension. The suspended LOP student must work out a personal re-admission contract. This usually involves attendance at another college or university for at least two semesters without receiving any LOP grades.

The LOP program has proven it can be beneficial to students. It provides a positive way of assisting those who may need motivation in progressing towards earning a college degree.

College provides chance to make lifelong friends

In the rush to get a good college education, are exams, tests, and grades to be active in church and an ASBYU volunteer, one choice part of the BYU experience can be overlooked — forming true friendships.

C.S. Lewis said on the subject, "Friendship arises out of mere companionship when two or more of the companions discover that they have in common some insight or interest or even taste which the others do not share and which, till that moment, each believed to be his own unique treasure (or burden)."

A unique opportunity exists at this university for many students to make richer, more rewarding friendships than they have made before because they are in the midst of thousands of students who share the same ideals and basic life goals. It seems possible to find someone here who shares common ideas of truth and beauty.

Discussing personal philosophies can be academically rewarding and stimulating. It is easy to overlook abstractions in a world of the concrete, but it becomes easier as responsibilities in life increase, and people around with common philosophies decrease.

One of the major benefits to be had from a university education is the sharing of minds. The chance for this exists in an academic environment as it does nowhere else, and not everyone will be fortunate enough to remain in such a place indefinitely.

When the opportunity for deep friendship and discussion is overlooked, students are doing a disservice to themselves. It isn't easy to make time just to talk with and relate to people, but it should be as easy as making time for the superficial relationships where the major thing held in common is admiration for physical good looks.

Changes in fish laws insure bigger trout

Saturday is the opener for most of Utah's fishing waters. Many students will be among the crowds of people thronging the shores of lakes and streams hoping to catch a do-it-yourself fish dinner. An area likely to receive less fishing pressure than usual because of newly enacted regulations, is the Provo River.

From the Utah Highway 35 bridge near Woodland to Deer Creek Reservoir, and from the reservoir to the Olmsted diversion (just below Vivian Park), fishermen are prohibited from using bait of any kind.

In addition to the artificial rule, no brown, brook or cutthroat trout over 13 inches may be kept on the two sections of river mentioned above. Statewide regulations for stream and river fishing have changed so that Utah anglers are allowed to keep only one trout of any kind over 13 inches.

Many sportsmen have objected to the new regulations on the grounds they will have less fish to eat. However, the regular season bag limit of eight fish has not changed, so anglers will be able to keep as many fish as before but the fish might be smaller.

Most fishermen will readily admit that while being able to consistently catch limits of trout is admirable, catching large trout is more memorable. The new fishing regulations for the Provo River will insure fishermen the opportunity of catching a large trout on what has been considered one of the best trout rivers in the United States.

The Division of Wildlife Resources and the fishing clubs who pushed to get new fishing regulations enacted should be commended for actions which may well result in an increase of large trout in Utah's waterways, and the Provo River especially.

Book has value

Editor:

Flint Stephens' rabid style in critiquing the "Open Door Guide to BYU" caused me to wonder what he was so upset about. Perhaps his expectations for a $1.80 investment were too great. Maybe his favorite professors were not mentioned.

Flint did point out several shortcomings of the guide, some of which would apply to any such guide, others of which represented the lack of experience on the part of Open Door in conducting surveys. Despite its flaws, the results of the survey can be quite useful in selecting both courses and professors.

Flint failed to mention that there is more to the guide than the survey. There are amusing anecdotes, facts and BYU-ability, but the most significant part of the guide is contained in the introduction, comments by professors and conclusion. Herein is found a side of BYU which is not to be found in administratively controlled publications — freedom of thought and expression.

Though I do not share some of the ideas expressed by Open Door, it is refreshing and encouraging to see a publication which challenges the patronizing relationship between the administration and students. I hope those students who would like to see more in print than is available through administratively checked channels will support the "Open Door Guide" and other such endeavors.

Club complains

Editor:

We firmly support the right of members of the press to express their opinions on editorial pages. However, we believe editorialists have a responsibility to deal accurately with the facts. We, therefore, request that you take the initiative to publicly acknowledge the misrepresentation of facts surrounding "An Open Door Guide to BYU" as reported in your editorial, "Guide Waste of Money," on May 21.

1) Perhaps the most disturbing inaccuracy was the report that we are making a "few bucks" and "filling the group's pockets" with student money from the sales of our book. A quick phone call to our printer, Blaine Hudson (Blaine Hudson Printing, Salt Lake City) and to the director of the BYU Bookstore (or to the Purchasing directors/managers of ZOMI, The Little Professor Bookstore, the local Seventies Bookstores, etc.) will establish that, from the beginning, we could only lose money on this endeavor.

2) We were further disturbed by the serious accusation that we have been dishonest in reporting the results of the surveys. The editorial stated we had not even kept a record of responses. The surveys, tally sheets, and even the telephone book used in the student poll are all on file in the HBL library and can be checked.

3) The editorial writer did not read the booklet carefully; otherwise, he would not have misunderstood how we conducted our surveys. If you would assign someone to read the booklet, the following can be quickly confirmed:

a) On page five of our publication, we noted that we required responses from at least the square root of the number of professors in any given

Tough laws needed to control leaded air

An age-old environmental health and air pollution problem is causing alarm among both federal and state air pollution control authorities. The problem is airborne lead produced by the combustion of leaded gasoline in cars. Mounting evidence suggests that the quantity of lead being breathed into our lungs is reaching dangerously high levels. Many public health officials say much stricter limits on lead in the air are needed to protect Americans from the dangers inherent in the lead.

Acute lead poisoning, with symptoms ranging from headaches and stomach pain to high blood pressure, permanent mental retardation and premature aging is a well-documented health problem. The toll that lifelong levels of lead poisoning may have already exacted on the health and mental development of the nation's population will never be known. Airborne lead has long been viewed as a pollution problem, but the full magnitude of the threat is just beginning to be understood.

Exposure to airborne lead in one quantity or another has afflicted human civilizations for thousands of years as a result of mining, smelting and other industrial applications. But at no time in history have people been exposed to lead in such high concentrations per capita as is the case today. It is crucial for our society to evaluate just how much lead should be permissible before taking significant action to stop this dangerous problem once and for all.

The Environmental Protection Agency evidently agrees. Last year, the EPA directed states to develop standardized monitoring procedures to check levels of lead in the air to initiate control programs if the levels were above accepted standards. The EPA then proposed a tough new set of stringent regulations designed to curb airborne lead pollution and reduce exposure to lead compounds in the air.

But the energy crisis has made futile the agency's efforts in this area. Federal energy officials are resisting any effort to control leaded gasoline — because gasoline considered a crisis commodity the days. In fact, the Department of Energy has advocated a further relaxation of EPA restrictions on the use of leaded gasoline as a response to the energy crisis. As the agency has opted to trade off its dedication to public health and the public's demand for better mileage (hence, increased production of leaded gasoline), the EPA is unable to address the problem effectively.

Airborne lead is an insidious danger that must be curbed to protect public health. Unless government is pressured into mandating strict controls on leaded gasoline, and until the public considers its own health more important than the kind of gasoline it buys, airborne lead will continue to wreck havoc on the health of American citizens.

contrary! Often the professors selected are those who teach the selected courses, even though the criteria for making selections in the different categories are unrelated. This correlation; perhaps you would like to. However, the majority are false as the others listed above, is false.

Editor's Note: In the editorial page comment the above letter refers to, there were two factual statements that The Universe would like to clarify. Our May 21 comment stated "some of the departments probably had only one or two professors" respond to the survey. Actually, there were at least three responses from every department. The May 21 comment also said that 2,000 phone calls were made with no record kept of who responded and who did not. According to the officers of Open Door, 2,000 completed responses were received from student telephone interviews. In the interest of fairness, The Universe wishes to acknowledge these errors.

Faulty judgments

Editor:

In response to the letter from a "departing student of BYU" who felt the need to express her thanks — which our really were complaints directed against BYU students in general:

Although I am not leaving BYU, I too, desire to extend a good-bye to the complainer — one of the pessimistic, hasty generalizers who did not take time to look beyond actions of a small group to judge whole. After all, the statement "returned missionaries prey on freshmen" appears general and untrue.

I will be the first to admit people are not always perfect here at BYU, but the majority are not. I am the girl who wrote cutting letter should have tried set the example rather than criticizing the bad examples of others.

Dairy dollars

Editor:

Why is it that the BYU Dairy long revered for its "bargain" prices asks an exorbitant $1.97 for a gallon of ice cream when the standard flavor and size costs only $1.89?

Review incomplete

Editor:

Mr. Stephens was a bit incomplete in his review of "An Open Door Guide to BYU." While student effort is by no means perfect, it should be commended for efforts to present a view on facts and courses at BYU. The survey may not have been totally so but it does represent an effort, initial and concluding pages sent some interesting views on academic and intellectual life at this university.

These views may be criticized some, but they do cause thought. Student efforts to constructively criticize and evaluate the university should be encouraged.
